

Mr Hardman

Author, Rodney Street.

Mr Hardman's Studio, is a Liverpool city centre Georgian terraced house. Local History Group 6 visited this National Trust property where photographer Edward Chambré Hardman and his gifted wife Margaret lived and worked. Unusually for a National Trust property, almost everything in this house was owned and used by the occupants as the couple, who had no children, were hoarders and never threw anything away, so that much of the house looks like it did when they were both alive, complete with unopened food rations and period clothing. Hardman was a talented landscape photographer by vocation, although his business was largely dependent on portraiture, with both relying on black and white images. Portraits were hand tinted, with colours recalled from clips of hair and smears of lipstick taken at the time images were captured.

impressive room intended to “wow” potential clients; the rear room became the clients’ changing room and the main first floor bedroom was his fully equipped studio. Hardman worked in the days when being photographed was an occasion and his photographs were developed and processed in a red lit back bedroom, using chemical concoctions still in their bottles, before they were “photoshopped” to remove clients’ blemishes to “bring out the best.”

Whilst stationed in India he met Captain Burrell and on their discharge, the pair established a business in Bold Street which, in the 1920s, was part of Liverpool's fashionable centre. Burrell was the silent partner, but had excellent contacts in the Liverpool business community. Even so, setting up the business was difficult and Hardman resorted to selling and repairing wirelasses as a side-line and many old radio parts remained in the property, “just in case.” Hardman won a contract to provide portraits and production shots of actors, including Margot Fonteyn, Ivor Novello, Michael Redgrave, Patricia Routledge, Robert Donat and Hugh Paddick all of which are displayed. The couple worked long hours in the studio, which partly explains their cluttered, sparse living quarters, yet they still found time for weekend expeditions when they strapped camera equipment onto their bicycles, or car and rode out into the countryside to shoot landscapes. Liverpool and the landscapes of the surrounding countryside were his favourite with his photograph of The Birth of the Ark Royal, becoming one of the most reproduced photographs.

Following his wife’s death, Hardman’s health declined. He became a recluse and worked less. He came to the attention of Liverpool's Social Services Department who were on the point of clearing the house when visitor Peter Hagerty, Director of Liverpool's Open Eye Gallery, intervened. Hagerty reported that people from Social Services were tidying up, had gowns on and were filling bin bags with rubbish. When he started to look in the bags, Hagerty saw photographs, negatives and magazines and was instantly aware that a historical record was about to be thrown away. Fortunately Hardman accepted Hagerty's suggestion to set up a trust to conserve his work, the trust later bequeathing his estate to the National Trust which because of room sizes operates guided tours of 6 people per time.

Hardman “photo-shopped” the gable end wall of the house in the foreground from white to black so that the Ark Royal was more prominent!

Polite Request

Author, Glyn Pike, Chairman U3A

Whilst the majority of Formby U3A members are polite and a pleasure to deal with there is, as in all walks of life, a small number of people who can spoil things. Your Data, Website Manager, Newsletter Editor, and Group Leaders are all unpaid volunteers, as are all Committee Members. There has been a recent spate of abrupt and rude messages sent to some of these people by members. If Formby U3A members wish to retain these volunteers and enjoy all that they do on members' behalf, it would be much appreciated if ALL members could please remember to be civil and polite when sending them e-mails and messages.

Liverpool University Colleges

Authors, Ron & Barbara Marsh.

Local History Group 7 enjoyed a tour, led by Ann Marshall who is an excellent Blue Badge guide, around the Liverpool University colleges. The tour started with refreshments in the Waterhouse cafe which is inside the historical Victoria Building at the top of Brownlow Hill. This was followed by an introductory chat about the history of the building and the University buildings.

We then visited the many old red brick buildings of the University within the complex including the old infirmary. This was followed by a stroll around the newer buildings and a visit to Liverpool Heroes Memorial in Abercrombie Square. This commemorates Captain Noel Chavasse VC and Bar MC, the only man to be twice awarded the military's highest award for valour, the Victoria Cross, in the First World War and fifteen other Liverpool-born Victoria Cross recipients. The tour ended in Abercrombie Square, before we all returned to the Waterhouse Cafe for lunch.

Everyone enjoyed a very interesting and informative tour of the area around the University which continues to be a great asset to the City of Liverpool.

Charity Carol Concert

All monies raised will go to the Salvation Army who do sterling work with the elderly, disadvantaged families and homeless during the festive season. They ensure those who need it get a hot meal, have some company or ensure a child gets a small present during the Christmas period. Entry is by ticket only which can be obtained from Peter Connor, telephone 382349.

Tatton Harvest Event

Author, Glen Alison.

The Outings Group was picked up by a Timewells coach for the first time; the journey took just over an hour. On arrival, there was plenty of time to visit the extensive gardens, cafés/restaurant, view historic vehicles including a beautiful horse-drawn carriage in a small museum that was used by royalty, and time to browse shops including one that sold produce grown in the walled garden. The Mansion was interesting as it had been kept as furnished by the last owner. Unfortunately, there was insufficient time to visit the house and gain information from the National Trust volunteer guides due to an error that Tatton Park had made regarding the proximity of Home Farm and the Harvest Festival service that was commencing at 1.30 pm when the house only opened at 1pm.

The coach took us to the farm where there was an opportunity to participate in the Harvest Festival service. It was very welcoming and a relaxed service in which there was a blessing for all the farm animals and any other pets that people had brought. We sat on hay bales, visiting children were given hens and chicks to hold or farm produce including honey, potatoes and jugs of milk. At appropriate times, the vicar encouraged the children to bring forward these items that we were giving thanks for. Thanks were also given for the births of the farm animals including a two months old foal and a young, rare-breed kid goat which amused the visitors with its antics including eating some vegetables from the large display and ran around with some flowers hanging from its mouth from the floral display! Visitors were handed a service sheet to contribute in the service and join in singing traditional Harvest Festival hymns, accompanied by a local brass band.

Afterwards, there were opportunities to visit the farm animals including a rare-breed sow with her eleven piglets! Other activities included: wood-turners making and selling their hand-made items, three ladies demonstrating how to spin wool, corn-dolly making, a talk from the farmer on animal welfare, a display with an explanation of historical farming methods, a large working steam engine to view and a playbarn where there was a vending machine for a hot drink.

Following a very varied and interesting day, we left Tatton Hall Park at 4pm and arrived in Formby an hour later. Despite some difficulties made by staff at Tatton, these were dealt with well by Ann, and we would like to thank her for yet another enjoyable outing.

The Bluecoat

Author, Jean Hatch.

Local History Group10 visited the Bluecoat in Liverpool where Samantha, a former pupil of Bluecoat's, gave us a conducted tour of this, Liverpool's oldest building dating from the early 18th Century. Celebrating its 300th Anniversary this year, Bluecoat has a fascinating history as a charity school for nearly 200 years but subsequently became the UK's first arts centre.

"The school for orphaned children was founded in 1708 by Rector of Liverpool, Reverend Robert Styth, and master mariner Bryan Blundell. They built a modest building belonging to St. Peter's Church opposite the present Bluecoat (originally spelt as two words, after the school moved out the building is referred to as 'Bluecoat'). The coats worn by pupils were blue, denoting charity. Blundell, the school's principal benefactor raised funds for a larger building where children would live and learn to "read, write and cast accounts". A brick kiln was set up on the site in 1715, a foundation stone laid in 1716 and 2 years later the first 50 boarders moved in, two thirds of their time being taken up in tasks to generate income for the school, a third in lessons. In 1722 almshouses were erected to the rear of the building and construction was completed in 1725 at a cost of just under £2,300.

The architect of the building has caused much speculation. Recent research has confirmed that Liverpool's dock engineer Thomas Steers, together with mason Edward Litherland, were responsible for constructing the building. They also worked together on other schemes in Liverpool, notably the Old Dock nearby, completed just before the Blue Coat in 1715. This connection to the world's first commercial wet dock, which would set the port on its course as a global trading power over the next two centuries, is significant. It positions Bluecoat as central to the birth of modern Liverpool. Many pupils were apprenticed to local employers involved in shipping, some becoming mates or masters of ships, many emigrating to the colonies. Funds to maintain the school came largely from merchants profiting from maritime trade. Many trustees and subscribers were engaged in the transatlantic slave trade and related industries like sugar, tobacco and cotton, in which Liverpool was the most prominent British port by the mid-eighteenth century. These merchants included Blundell's sons. It was an age of extraordinary contrasts when brutality and philanthropy often went hand in hand. In the next century old boy of the school, Richard Ansdell – a Royal Academician – painted the Hunted Slaves (1861) which now hangs in Liverpool's Slavery Museum. Several artists since the 1980's have interrogated the building's school history and its connections to mercantile trade including slavery.

A fine example of Queen Anne architecture (though actually built during George 1's reign), Bluecoat's distinctive features include Liverpool's oldest surviving liver birds, over the gate and doorways in the cobbled front courtyard. Also of note are a one-handed clock, cherubs' heads over the windows and oval windows above these.

Graffiti from the 18th century, carved into cornerstones in a secluded part of the courtyard, is a reminder of the building's school days. The cupola on the roof once supported a weathervane of a ship, symbolising the importance of maritime trade to the building. This features in a 1718 engraving, produced to raise money for the school, which includes other architectural details that have since disappeared: statues on the pediment denoting faith, hope and charity, balustrades and flambeaux, and checkerboard paving covering the courtyard, though it is doubtful this was ever realised. Apart from these differences, the building's front façade is little changed.

By the time of Blundell's death in 1756 the school housed 70 boys and 30 girls. His sons continued their father's work, further expanding the building to accommodate 200 pupils, with a new workroom, sick room, chapel and refectory (the present foyer). During the 19th century the school continued to grow with support from local people, including former pupils who had gone on to become wealthy. There were many alterations to the building during this period, the school expanding up School Lane and along Hanover Street.

Eminent Liverpool historian, abolitionist and writer William Roscoe's 1770 poem 'Mount Pleasant' which refers to Bluecoat, suggests a more liberal approach to the children's education had been adopted by this point, however in 1800 conditions at the school were still harsh. That year, perhaps in protest, 107 of the 320 pupils played truant after attending the Liverpool Fair, some not returning for days. As a consequence, they were not punished, but given concessions instead, including longer playtimes.

In the early 19th century education reformer Dr. Andrew Bell's Madras system of education was adopted, with abler pupils passing on their learning to other students. The St. Georges Day Parade, when the school band led a procession through the front gates observed by the Mayor, members of the Corporation and school trustees, became a well-known local event. In 1906 the school finally outgrew its premises and moved to a new building in Church Road Wavertree, where it remains today.

It seems strange that the future of a building as beautiful as Bluecoat could have been in question. However for the first half of the 20th century it was never entirely free from the threat of destruction or financial insecurity. Its story over this period is one of struggle for survival. At the same time the arts flourished, with Bluecoat becoming a pioneering creative hub, whose impact was felt by the region's artists and spread far beyond the building.

In 1907 a group of artists, the Sandon Studios Society – disaffected former students who had broken away from the University of Liverpool's School of Applied Art and Design – rented accommodation for art classes and studios in the empty school building. This independent art school marked the beginning of an artistic community at Bluecoat that continues today."

The Group thoroughly enjoyed this visit, the above extract from Bluecoat's own literature is a mere fraction of what we saw and learned and the venue comes highly recommended.

Chatsworth At Christmas

Author, Jean Campbell, photos David Skelton.

It was a fine dry, morning as the Outings Group set forth on our outing to Chatsworth House to see the Christmas decorations and Christmas market. After a comfortable and chatty journey we arrived at our destination and after listening to a “meeter and greeter” who gave us some information and left out a great deal, more we were let loose. Like school children we rushed eagerly along the path but most of us were heading to the toilet block after our coach ride.

As we entered the market we were treated to an unexpected surprise, our very own fly-by, as two aeroplanes flew so low the pilots could see the whites of our very surprised eyes! What a welcome, we felt like royalty. The market was very Christmassy with fir trees scattered around and merrily lit stalls exhibiting a good choice of novelty and speciality goods with interesting names like, Fun Fairies and Hot Pots. There were a good choice of places to eat, both indoors and outside. Some of us had tasty looking fish and chips others had brought their own lunch and contented themselves with a mulled wine or two to add a bit of Christmas cheer.

We all assembled at the entrance of Chatsworth House at our appointed time and began our tour. The theme this year is Dickens and his well read books. There many ingenious items made from books such as a huge archway and smaller things like stars and houses that were lit from inside . There were also scenes from Oliver, Little Dorrit and Great expectations with a scary scene of Scrooge sitting up-right in his bed in terror after his visit from Marley's ghost amongst others.

As we left the house we made our way to the coach for our homeward journey: tired aching feet and empty pockets .

Ann had previously booked a table at the Cross House for those of us who wanted to have a meal there when we arrived back in Formby. It was a great way to round off the day.
